

ORBI

and the Angry Wind

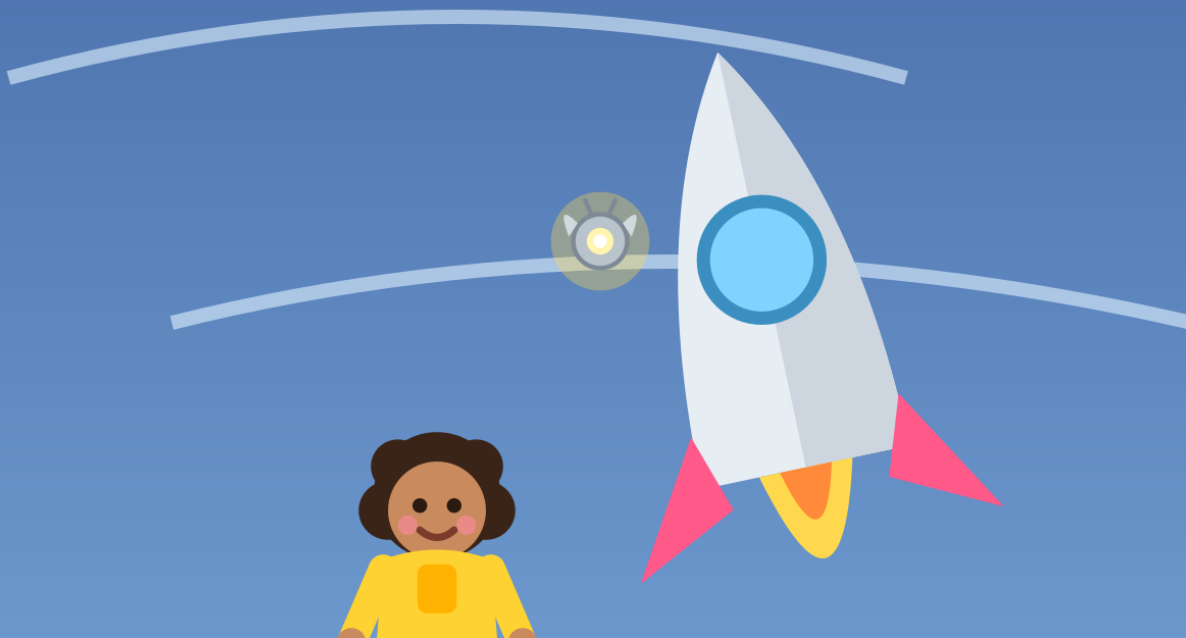

On a planet of tousled skies lived a little whirlwind named Remo. Whenever something went wrong, he spun faster and faster.

One day he spun so hard he ruffled the trees, blew away the hats, and scared the birds. "I can't stop!" cried Remo, and he spun even more.

Orbi and Chispa arrived in their tin rocket, tumbling through the gale.

"Hello, Remo," said Orbi, holding down her hair. "Why do you spin so fast?"
"Because I'm angry... and I don't know how to stop!"

"I know a secret of the air," said Orbi. "Come, let's look for it slowly."

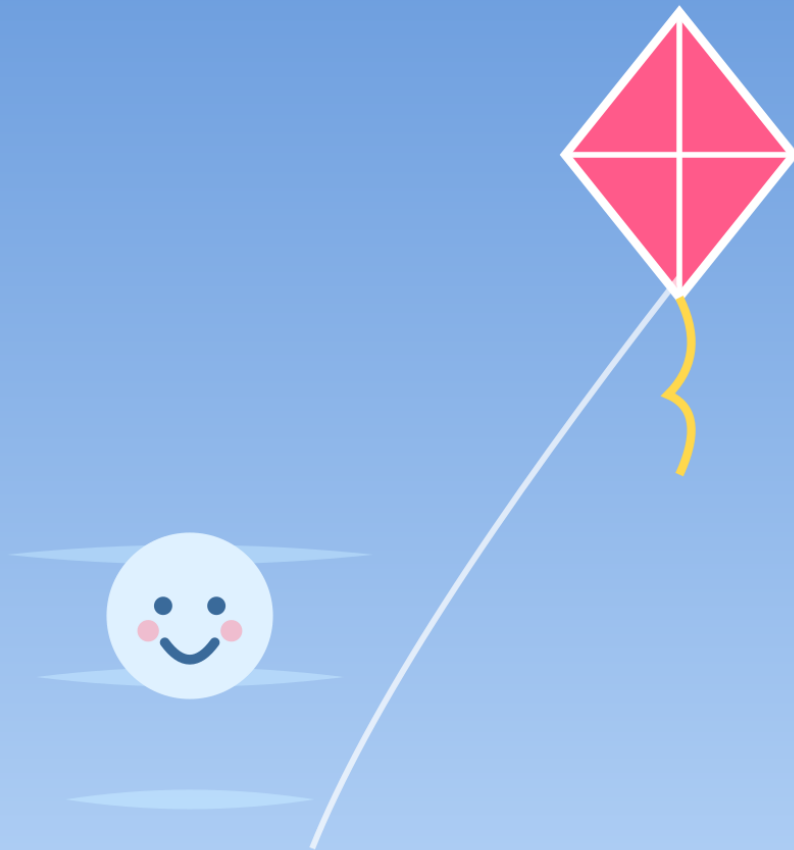

First they climbed the Mountain of Silence, where the air moved very, very slowly. "Here," said Orbi, "breathe deep and the calm comes back."

Remo tried: he breathed in... one, two, three... and let it out gently. He spun a little less.

Then they visited the Old Kite, who could only fly if the wind was soft. "If you blow calmly, I reach the clouds," she said. "If you blow in fury, I fall."

Remo blew slowly and the kite soared high. "I did it without getting angry!"
"Breathe deep and the calm comes back."

At last he understood: strong wind breaks things, but calm air caresses, carries kites, and dries tears.

01F
499

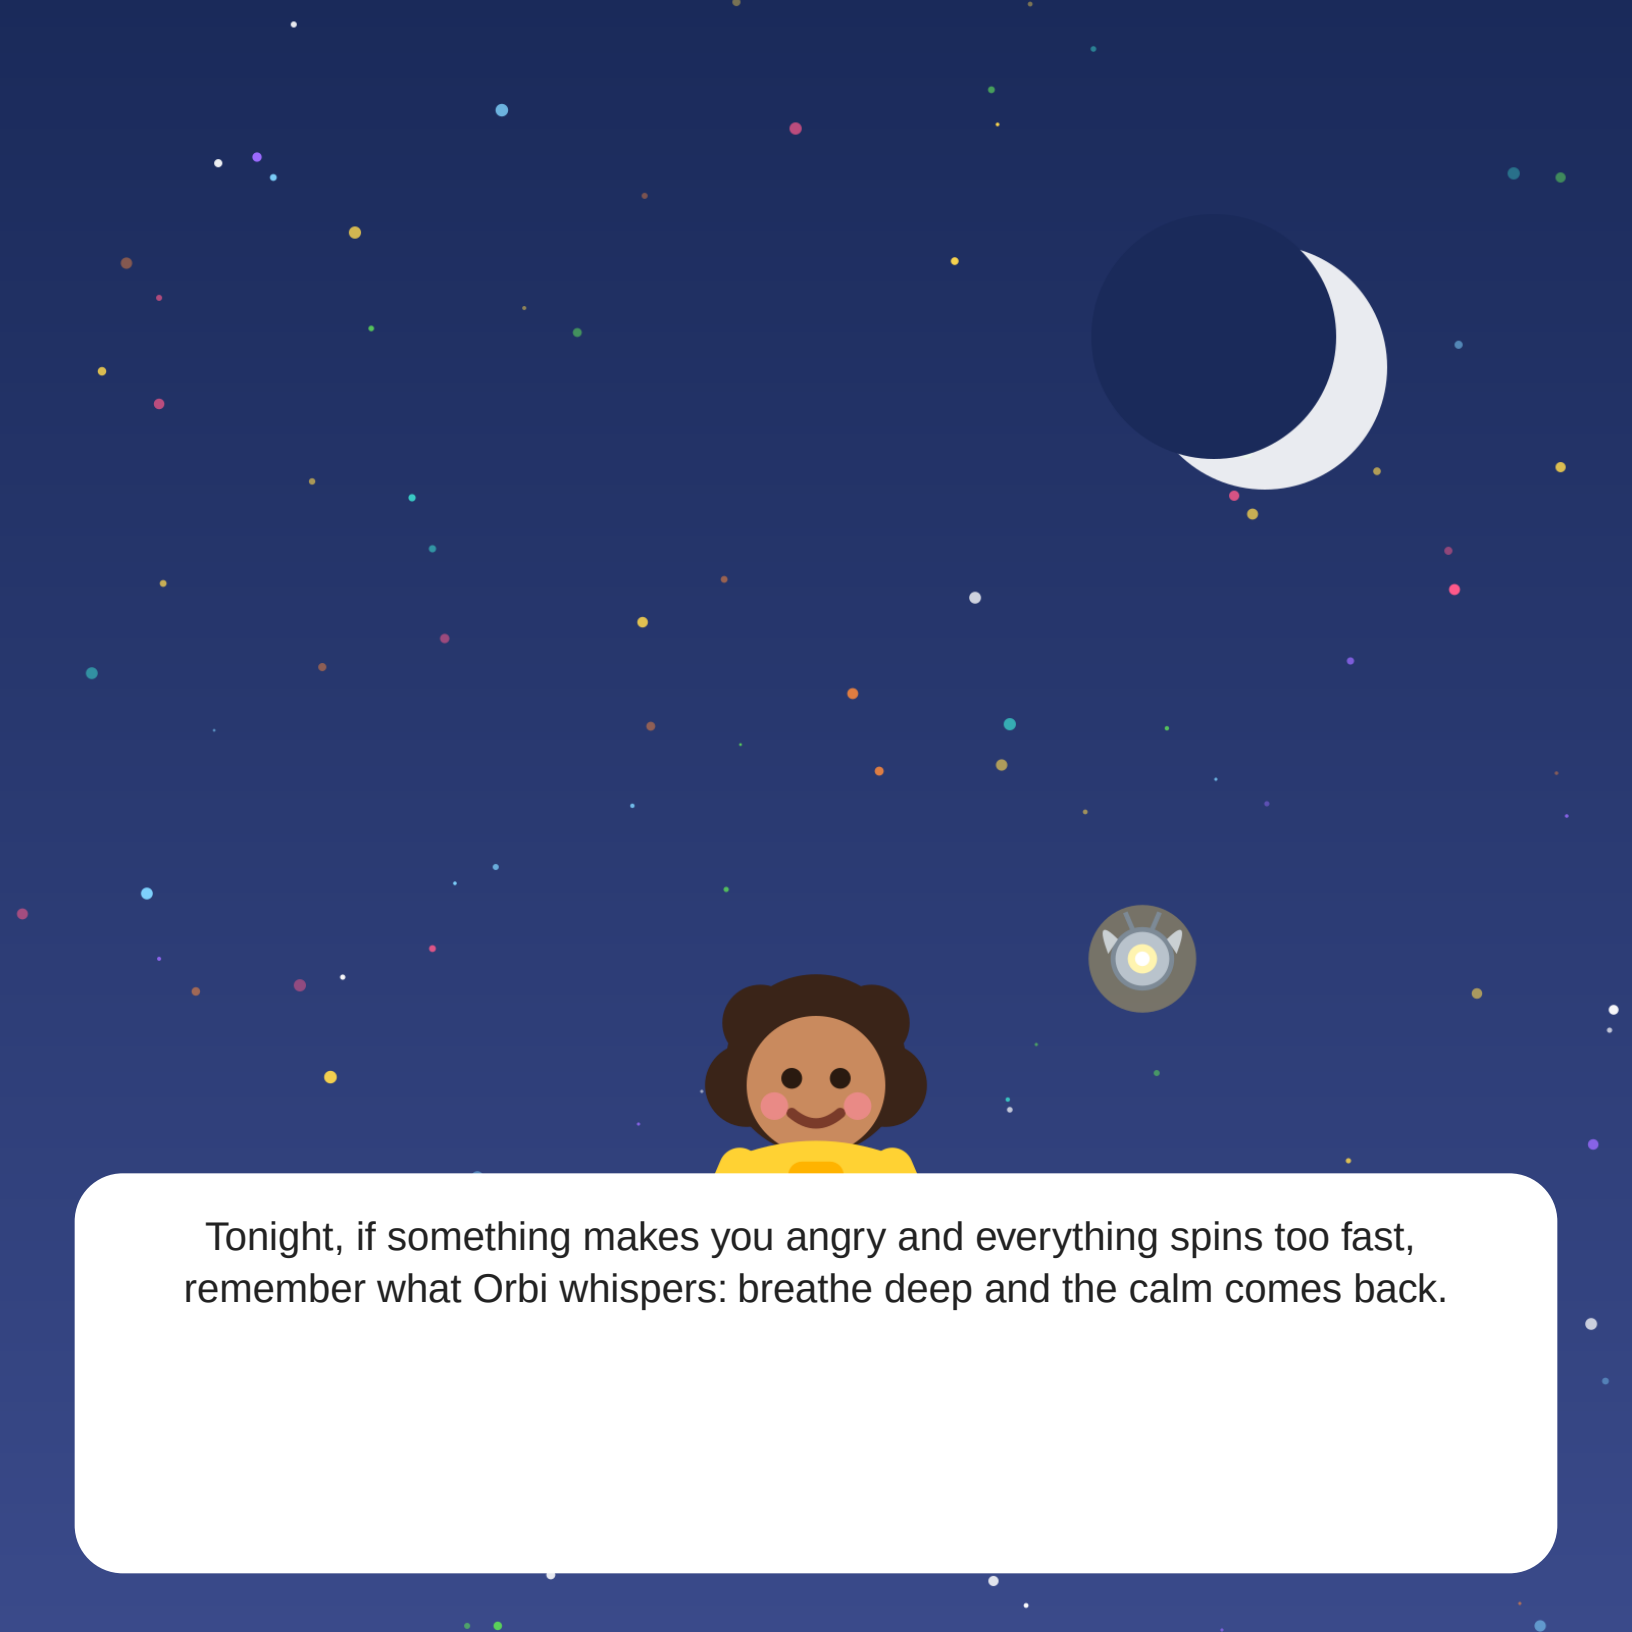

"Your anger wasn't bad," said Orbi. "It just needed to learn how to breathe."

Remo breathed deep once more and turned into a soft breeze, cool and sky-blue.

The birds came back, the hats floated down, and the whole planet sighed with relief. "Thank you, Remo!"

Tonight, if something makes you angry and everything spins too fast, remember what Orbi whispers: breathe deep and the calm comes back.

"breathe deep and the calm comes back"

THE END